A. Background

Occasionally a work being cataloged generates a proposal for a new generic heading and for a corresponding subdivision that is applicable not only under the heading being assigned to the new work, but also under other headings as well. In such cases, it is useful to propose the subdivision under all of the appropriate headings at the same time. This serves to establish the new concept and its pattern of usage firmly in the subject authority file.

C. General rule

When establishing a new subdivision that is applicable to many different topics, make a reasonable effort to locate the other appropriate topics under which the subdivision should also be established.

Example:

When the heading *Contracting out* and the subdivision *—Contracting out* were established for a work on the contracting out of municipal services, the subdivision was established not only under *Municipal services* but also under *Corrections*; *Police*; *Public welfare*; *Social service*; and *Wildfires—Prevention and control*. These usages were all justified by titles that had been previously cataloged.

D. Representative sample of topics

If the new subdivision is applicable to so many topics that it would be virtually impossible to establish it under them all, establish it at least under a representative sample of the most important topics in order to illustrate how it is to be used.

E. LC practice for bibliographic file maintenance

In accordance with standard procedures for new subject heading proposals given in H 200 sec. D.11, record the number of records whose subject assignments will require correction because of the new subdivision being established. If the number is less than fifteen, submit a list of LCCNs of the records to be updated.
